1 Introduction

Wittenborg respects staff members' rights to have their personal data protected and treated carefully with care and respect. Rules related to privacy-sensitive data are laid down in the General Data Processing Regulation (GDPR) or AVG in Dutch (Algemene verordening persoonsgegevens). The General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) has been in force since 25 May 2018.

In the context of processing personal data by Human Resources, the term Data Subject is used in the GDPR. This mainly concerns applicants, employees, guest lecturers, freelancers, interns and former staff members or otherwise engaged natural persons such as in advisory bodies. In this policy this group is being referred to as “staff member”.

This GDPR policy outlines specifically how Wittenborg treats the personal data of staff members.

All staff members should only use personal data for its intended purposes and should, principally, not supply said data to third parties. All personal data is treated confidential.

1.1 What Are Personal Data

The authority for protecting personal data in the Netherlands (AP) states that personal data is any information about an identified or identifiable natural person. This means that information is either directly about someone or can be traced back to this person. Data of deceased persons or of organisations is not personal data according to the AVG.

1.1.1 Examples of Personal Data

There are many sorts of personal data, most common information is for example someone's name, address and place of residence. Telephone numbers and zip codes with house numbers are also considered personal data.

1.1.2 Special Personal Data

Sensitive data such as a person's race, religion, or health is referred to as special personal data. These are extra protected by law. It is prohibited to process special personal data, unless there is a legal exception.

Special personal data is data about someone's:

- Racial or ethnic origin
- Political views
- Religion or beliefs
- Membership of a trade union/association
- Genetic data
- Biometric data for the unique identification of a person
- Health
- Sexual life
- Criminal past

Legal exceptions have been made for certain processing operations. One of the exceptions is that the Data Subject has given explicit consent to the processing.

1.1.3 Sensitive Personal Data

The GDPR also mentions sensitive personal data. Sensitive personal data can for example be:

- A copy of an identity document / residence permit
- The citizen service number (BSN) or foreigner's number (V-number)
- Data concerning one's performance
- Information with regard to a disability

1.2 Processing Personal Data

The AP sees “processing” as all actions that an organisation can perform with personal data, from collection to destruction. Acts that fall under the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) in any case are: collecting, recording, organizing, structuring, storing, updating or changing, retrieving, consulting, using, forwarding, disseminating, making available, bringing together, with data association, blocking, erasure and destruction.

1.2.1 Principles of Processing Personal Data

1. Any time personal data is processed, this is seen as an invasion of the privacy of the people concerned. Purpose of processing personal data should be clearly defined, there should be a necessity to process the data for this purpose and you may only process the data in case there is no other options.
2. In principle, as little data as possible should be processed. For example, if you want to send a newsletter to all your customers, you will need the email address, but for this purpose you do not need the customer's date of birth.
3. A separate legal ground for each purpose for which you process data should be found. If you cannot find a ground, you may not process the data. Legal grounds for Wittenborg can be:
 - a. The data is needed to perform an agreement, for example Wittenborg students' data related to the educational background is needed in order to determine whether a student can be admitted into a programme.
 - b. There is a legal obligation to process the data, for example information concerning salaries paid to employees are being shared with the tax office while declaring the income tax.
 - c. The person has given permission to process personal data.
 - d. Legitimate interest: You may process personal data if this is necessary to represent your legitimate interest. For example, if you want to fight fraud within your company.
4. These rules only apply to normal personal data, processing special personal data is prohibited, unless there is a legal exception.

1.2.2 Privacy Notice

When there is a legal ground for processing normal personal data, you have the right to do so. People must be informed about the processing of their personal data. This can be done via an (online) privacy notice. The ground must be registered in the privacy notice and in the processing register.
